

It's bad enough that the public bandwidth is virtually given away to multinational corporations. Deregulating the electronic media provides no local control. Commercial TV is just that - seemingly endless commercials with less and less content. Now we put up with "bugs" appearing on the screens during the increasingly uninspired programming. Views from the left are banned from op-ed programming. Listen to your critics. The FCC is becoming more like the FAA every day -- a sycophant to the powers it is sworn to regulate.
